Limitations of the Study

- Scheduling challenges with stakeholders
- PIAC's perception study limited to a pool of fewer than 20 people

The cornerstone for this communication strategy is that communications, especially external communications, should be viewed as a tool that is not just an ancillary add-on, but a crucial instrument that facilitates and adds significant value to all of PIAC's operational endeavours.

PIAC's Public Perception

"HOW IS PIAC PERCEIVED?"

"There is a misconception about PIAC's role in government, with confusion about the institution as a governmental agency responsible for the direct management & distribution of petroleum instead of its role as an accountability actor."

- International Oil & Gas Company

"We want reports broken down to simpler levels and into languages such as Akan and Ewe, that can be understood and appreciated by less elite citizens."

- PIAC Representative Agency

"The scope of PIAC's public engagements is small; the groups who attend events are limited and they are also not resourced to send the information further down to other members of the public."

- Central Government Institution

PIAC is appreciated as an important institution engendering transparency & accountability, but there is a view that stakeholders do not always act on PIAC's recommendations

Public's awareness and appreciation of PIAC & its mandates are somewhat deficient

The work of PIAC is extremely technical, with findings presented in complex papers and arcane publications in only English, making it disengaging to the broader Ghanaian population.

The lack of awareness & full understanding of PIAC & its activities is further due to the constraint of PIAC's public engagement activities to educated & middle-income circles

SWOT Analysis of PIAC

STRENGTHS

- Statutory independence
- Established mandate
- Strong technical expertise
- Protected Funding
- Regular reporting

WEAKNESSES

- Limited resources
- Limited public awareness
- Limited enforcement powers

- Increased public awareness
- Greater collaboration
- Policy influence

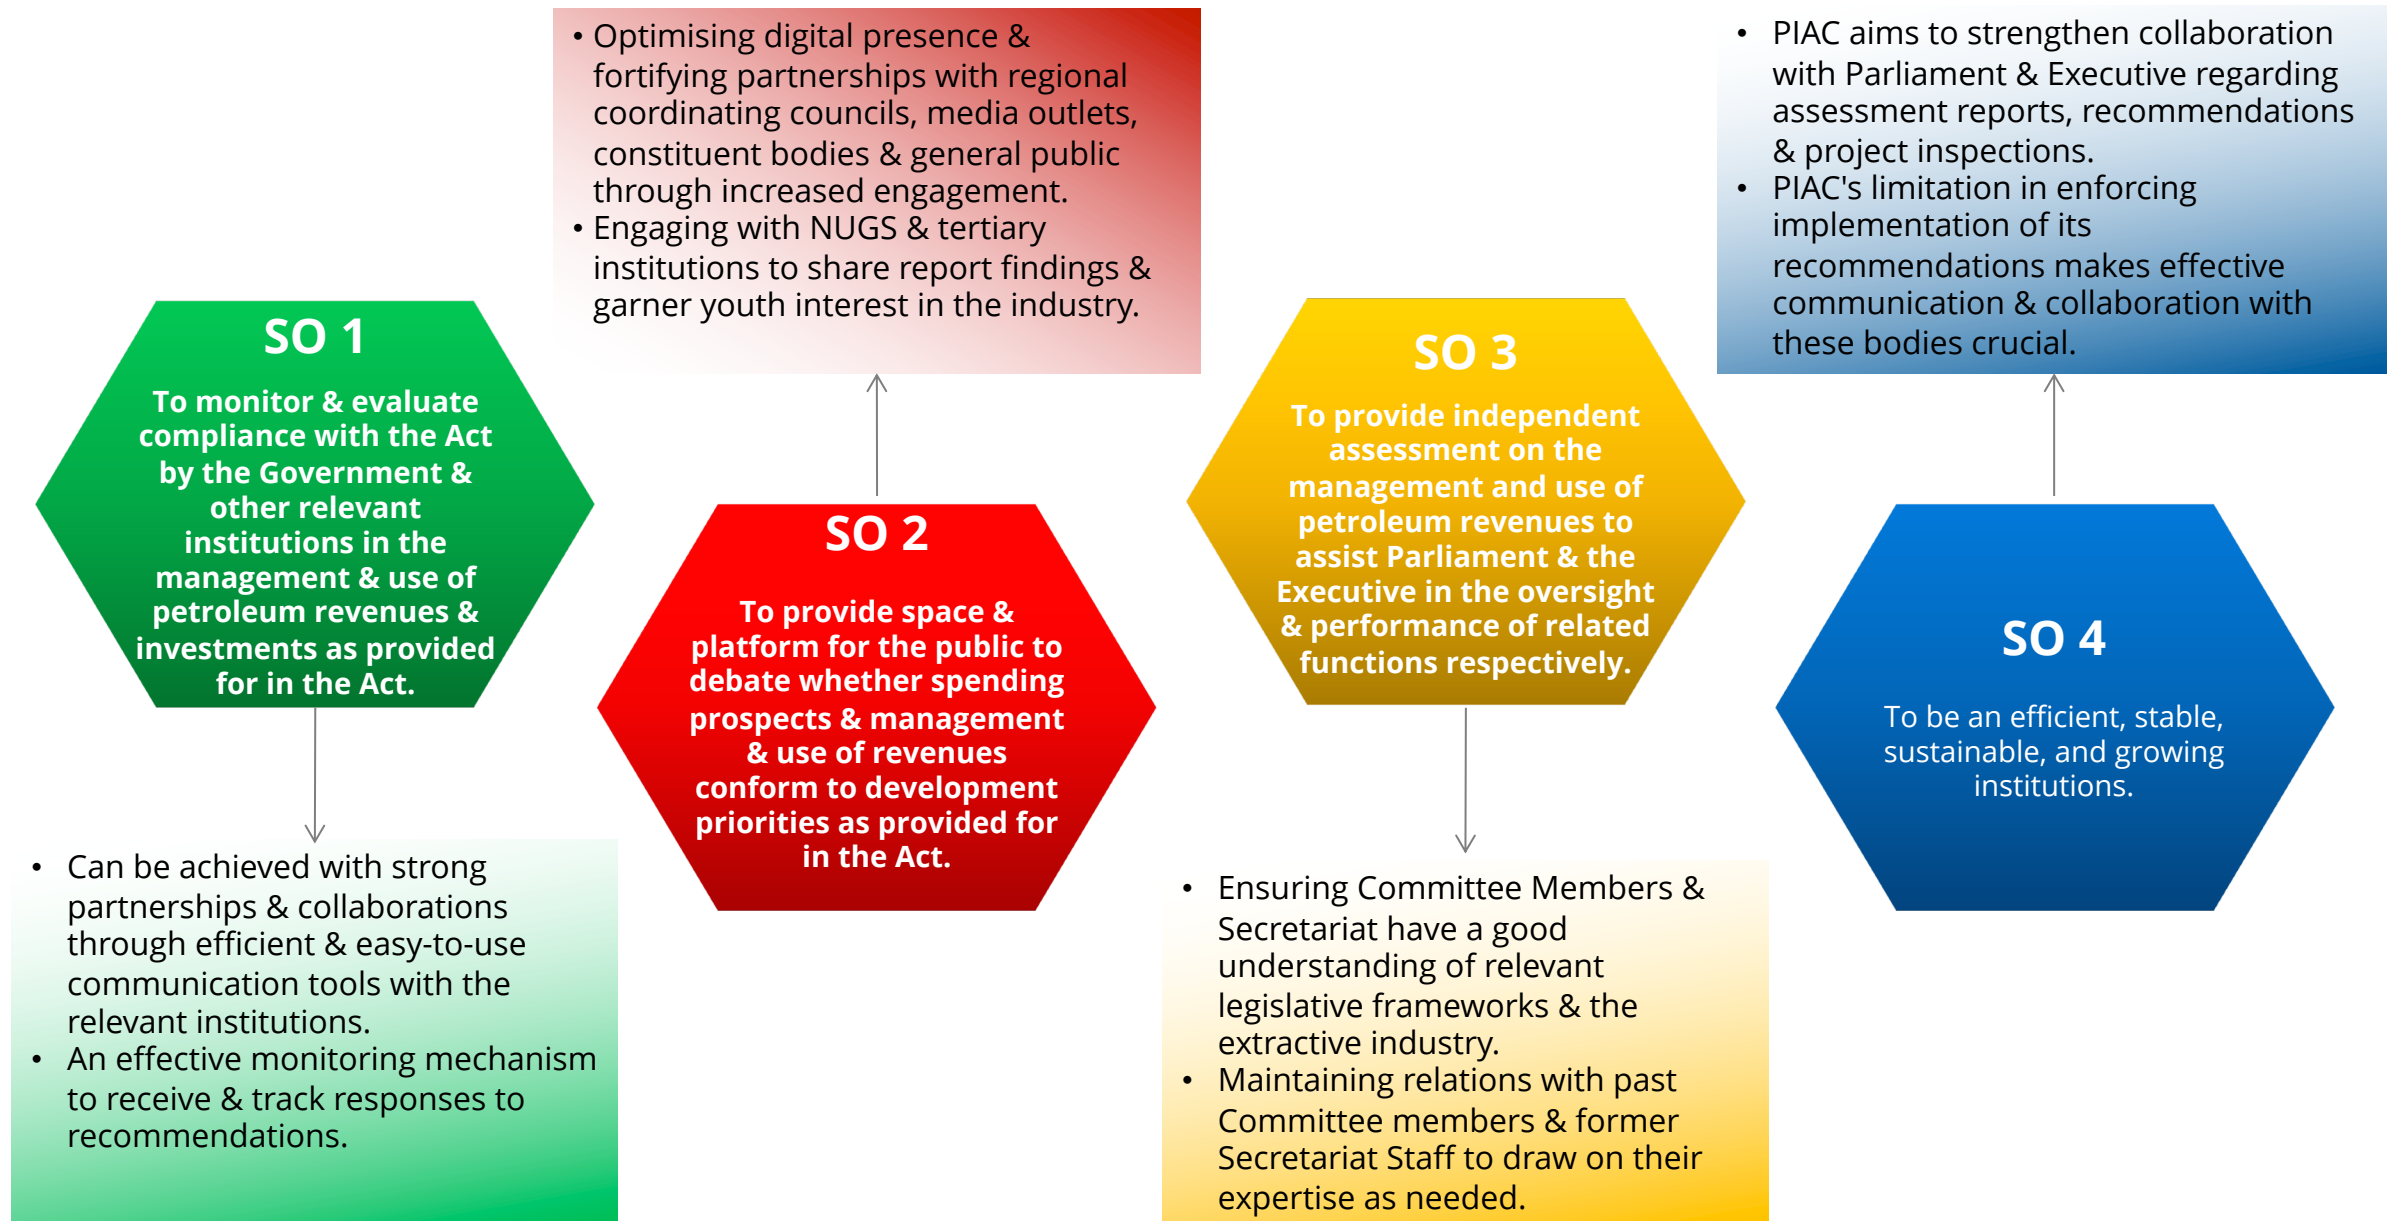

OPPORTUNITIES

- Political interference
- Limited stakeholder engagement
- Volatility in global oil & gas markets and the energy transition
- Reduced trust from the public
